

Kroll and StepStone Group Launch Private Credit Benchmarks

September 8, 2025

A new industry standard for faster, more precise and confident decision-making in private capital markets

NEW YORK, Sept. 08, 2025 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Kroll, the leading independent provider of global financial and risk advisory solutions, and StepStone Group (Nasdaq: STEP), a global private markets solutions provider, today announced the launch of the Kroll StepStone Private Credit Benchmarks (Benchmarks). A new industry standard, the Benchmarks enable more robust and rigorous valuation and provide an unmatched level of intelligence into the asset class's investment characteristics.

The private credit Benchmarks are a result of an industry-first collaboration, built using loan-level data and information from more than 15,000 deals, as opposed to fund-level aggregates or modeled estimates. Developed with the long-standing and data-driven private markets expertise of Kroll and StepStone Group, the Benchmarks deliver more timely, reliable and actionable insights, on an anonymized basis, which are essential to the accelerated growth of private investment markets.

"Investor interest and confidence in private markets is growing, in part buoyed by the 'retailification' of private capital, and we expect investors to allocate even more to private markets over the coming years," said Jacob Silverman, CEO of Kroll. "We are excited to partner with StepStone Group and respond to this market demand with a rigorous solution that enables near real-time market monitoring and provides vital intelligence for industry participants."

Updated weekly with new primary market data, the Benchmarks provide aggregated, anonymized, filterable insights across regions, sectors, size and loan security. This includes extensive coverage across U.S. and European markets, facilitating targeted and timelier capital allocation decision-making, portfolio monitoring, and loan terms and pricing.

Marcel Schindler, Partner and CEO of StepStone Private Debt, added, "We continue to see strong demand for private credit solutions across the world's investors and, with that, comes an increasing need for clarity and granular benchmarks in this rapidly evolving asset class. By combining Kroll's robust dataset in private credit with complementary data contained within our SPI by StepStone platform, we're building a powerful intelligence toolkit that enables improved decision-making for investors and market participants across the private credit ecosystem."

Michael H. Dolan, President of Financial Advisory at Kroll, explained, "We believe private investment markets are an enduring opportunity for growth as retail investors gain access and begin to shift from public to private market investment strategies. This trend has been augmented by a proliferation of evergreen funds. Retail investors currently control more than 50% of global wealth, however, they only control about 20% of private market assets under management. The industry is at an inflection point and Kroll is excited to help drive this market transition."

Tyler Johnson, Partner and Chief Technology Officer of StepStone Group emphasized, "Robust and granular benchmarking has long been a challenge in private markets, one that StepStone has addressed since its inception through our SPI by StepStone platform. Our collaboration with Kroll will continue that mission to build a better data and analytics toolkit, bringing deeper intelligence and transparency for private credit to all market participants."

The Benchmarks are available through the Private Capital Markets Platform which, as part of Kroll's Private Asset Valuation Solutions, enables users to easily identify, analyze and model critical valuation drivers of illiquid investments and fund-level data at scale.
